How VATA manifests physically:

- body thin and lean, very tall or small
- slight dryness in the body (hair, skin...)
- light weight: easy to lose
- bony structure, irregular teeth
- cracking joints
- hardly any sweat
- pulse is feeble and irregular

And physiologically:

- irregular appetite, skip meals easily
- irregular digestion, bloated/gas
- tendency to constipation
- small dry hard stool

VATA is responsible for:

- all movements (upward, downward, circular, peristaltic, outward, inward)
- motor activity
- breathing
- regulates the natural urges, throws out the waste material, responsible for excretion of different excreta from the body
- regulates the peristalsis and enzyme secretion for the proper absorption and cell nourishment
- stimulates the digestive fire, helps in deglutition (swallowing) of food
- makes the heart beat regularly
- good blood circulation
- regulates the transportation of any kind (eg: the food along the digestive tract)
- regulates menstruations and deliveries

The 5 Vayu (Vata):

- Prana Vayu: the vital air: located in the head and moves in the chest and throat. Helps breathing (inhaling), swallowing food, functioning arteries, veins and nerves. Supports mind, heart, sense organs and intelligence.

- Udana Vayu: the rising air: located in the diaphragm and throat. Any upward movements, exhalation, speech, voice, effort.

- Samana Vayu: associated with digestive fire: located in the small intestine and navel region. Moves in the whole intestinal tract to facilitate the digestion and assimilation, transports waste products.

- Apana Vayu: the downward air: located in the large intestine and pelvis, moves in the waist, bladder, genital organs and thighs. For elimination of stool, urine, semen and menstrual blood, keeps the foetus in uterus for 9 months, helps during birth by pressing downwards.

- Vyana Vayu: the omnipresent air: located in the heart and diffuses through the body, moves all over the body, blood circulation, movements
